Leggi.Q: Algorithm for n minute binary clock I have a challenge but I can't come up with a solution. The challenge is as follows: In a two minute binary clock, what would be the algorithm to calculate the present date? I am not even sure if this is possible, but I have done several theoretical researches on this topic and I just can't seem to find a way to do this. Edit: When measuring time, you can imagine that a minute mark stays put and that a second mark follows it. A: To answer your "question" more precisely, suppose that you have a two minute binary clock with the following state: Second digit is always zero Hour is arbitrary Minute is always zero Then you can derive a representation of the current time simply using: $f(t) = \lfloor 2t+11 \rfloor \bmod 14$ Conversely, the current time t can be expressed as follows: $t = \lfloor 2f(t)+11 \rfloor \bmod 14$ For example, if the current time is $f(t) = 0$, then $t = 2f(t) + 11 = 22$ so the current time is 12:22. A: For the n minute binary clock, which you said you thought was the topic of your question, the following algorithm works: $t = 11n + 10n + \dots$

In recent years, the category of drug dealer or drug user has been increasingly viewed as a kind of deviance in social life, a sign of bad lifestyle and conduct that is constantly at the root of all social suffering. Not only can the language of crime be related to deviant language, but it can be used by youngsters to legitimise their bad conduct. In this paper, the aim is to explore the role of criminal language in the emergence of a crime culture in the low-income suburb of Port-au-Prince, the capital city of Haiti. The main argument is that, by its use and exchange, criminal language proves to be a powerful tool for youngsters in the socialisation process. In order to investigate this conclusion, an ethnographic study was conducted within two quite different social groups: criminals from diverse social classes, and students of a prestigious lyc e in Port-au-Prince. It may thus be of interest to pursue the particular research question that this paper deals with, that is, the role of criminal language in the socialisation process of young people. In fact, more specifically, the purpose of this study is to investigate the role that negative messages play in shaping the attitudes of young people towards crime in the suburbs of Port-au-Prince, in their relations with fellow residents of the suburbs and in the high level of crime that exists in this suburb. The notion of criminal language is, in fact, related to the notion of code, which should be considered as a kind of medium for the communication of certain messages that are used by both young people and adults for a variety of purposes. More specifically, the first part of the paper concentrates on the role of criminal language in adolescents. This is clearly observed in the process of learning the codes of the criminal world. The second part is devoted to an examination of how prison parents communicate their codes of conduct to their juvenile children. The conclusion deals with the relation between the codes learned by the adolescents of low-income suburbs and those learned by the children of the prison. i some buona informazioni della matematica pdf The University is located near central Budapest.
